

At War With The Gods Of War

15 3 5

Chapter 1 by Alasdair

Xander stood atop the cracked stone wall in his dented, scratched plate armour. The wall he was on circled the once great city of Namki. His eyes lazily scanning the horizon and his hands holding a spear that felt as heavy as a sack of bricks, this was the last refuge of humanity as the rest of kingdom had been crushed under the power of the void walkers. His eyes widened as he spotted a cloud of dust in a far off mountain pass, this could only mean one thing the void walkers had arrived.

Chapter 2 by Alasdair

We'll crush their bones and drink their blood and grind their faces in the mud!" The Void walkers chanted this over and over people trembled with fear, some even silting their own throats as they heard the death chant. Then, like there was some hidden order only they could hear, they charge. They had sleek black bodies that were on average six feet tall with tough armour like skin. They had long curving talons that they used to scamper up the wall. The ragged sorry excuse for an army stood on the walls trying to stab them or knock them down with limited success. Each 2,000 large group of void walkers was commanded by a God of war and they were commanded by the God of War Gods E'kohar.

Chapter 3 by Alasdair

The king stood atop the wall surrounded by his guards and knocked an arrow to his bow. This wasn't just any arrow though it was the gift the God of destiny had given him when it was captured and killed by the void walkers. He saw the God of war gods yet did not tremble and cry like even the most strong willed men did when they saw the God. Instead he breathed deeply and fired the beautifully designed arrow. The arrow hit the God made void walkers fall to their knees and write in the ground the words that were only to pick up the limp body of E'kohar and drag it away. The void walkers stopped moving permanently.
